Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bruette Entertain at Their Home-Democrats Hold Street Rally-Personals and Notes.

The democrats made their last stand The democrats made their last stand before election in front of the hook and ladder rooms on North Main street Monday evening, when Earl Mathewson, democratic candidate for representative, and, Widiam J. Fitzgerald, labor's candidate, addressed a fair sized crowd. Those gathered were enthusiastic and burned a quantity of red fire. Mr. Mathewson and Mr. Fitzgerald were in an automobile and had spoken in the outlying parts of the town.

Entertained in Honor of Hallowe'en A very enjoyable Hallowe'en party was recently given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bruette on Laurel Hill. The guests were dressed in costume appropriate to the occasion. Among the guests was one representing Charlie Chaplin who gave a very pleasing recitation entitled Congerdene. Mr. Simpson was entertaining as Juliet and his wife as Borney Those as Juliet and his wife as Romeo. These two rendered Silver Thread Among the Gold. The evening was spent with games and music. Dainty refresh-ments were served by the hostess as-sisted by her sister Mrs. Mush. The party broke up at a late hour all vot-ing Mr. and Mrs. Bruette excellent en-tertainers.

PREPAREDNESS (#) How It Helps Coughs and Colds

Buy your bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar-new, and quickly stop the coughs and colds of early fall. Early fall brings croup, brenchitis, asthmatic breathing, troublesome night coughs, whooping cough, and tickling, irritable throat.

It aggravates the distressing cough of weak lungs, and the chronic coughs of elderly people.

It gives "snuffles" to infants and children and provokes adenoids and sore inflamed throats.

Give Foley's Honey and Tar freely. It is so soothing and curative, relieves hourseness and puts a healing coating on the inflamed mucous lining of the throat. It stops coughing easily and quickly and relieves croup before this dreaded thing has a chance to really harm the children or scare the parents. The last does is just as good as the first, and a less amount is needed than of any other cough syrup. So see to it that you get only the original FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR, for it is the

SOW WILD OATS? Central Baptist Pastor Answered the Question at Sunday Evening Service.

MUST A YOUNG MAN

At the Sunday evening service at the Central Baptist church the pastor, Rev. Joel B. Slocum, D. D., preached the final in the series of four special sermons on topics of everyday interest. At the Sunday evening service at the Central Baptist church the pastor, Rev. Joel B. Slocum, D. D., preached the final in the series of four special sermons on topics of everyday interest. The attendance at the service was large. Rev. Dr. Slocum took for his text Gal. 6: 7, Whatsoer a man soweth, that also shall he reap. The topic of the sermon was Must a Young Man Sow Wild Oats? In part, Rev. Dr. Slocum spoke as follows:

It is astonishing how many people there are living in the world that still think that he must. And one of the discouraging things about it is that that old moss-grown notion is not confined to the young men themselves who sow the wild oats. There are as lot of other people who also think he reap."

There is laid down in that sentence a law of life so inflexible and so universal that even God Himself could not change it without changing the whole order of His physical, moral and Minitors, brushes, etc. Elisworth A Hawthorne, Bridgeport, vehicle lamp Spiritual government in the world and in the universe.

NORWICH MAN WANTED

BY MYSTIC AUTHORITIES, For a difference of kinds. The kernel of wheat will reproduce its kind for a million of years, and then for another Paul Rolia Alleged to Have Stabbed Robinson Silk Company Employe.

Prosecuting Attorney B. H. Hewitt of Mystic has issued a warrant for the abundance of the yield and as to the abundance of the havest, due to soil or season or human care, still it will be forever and ever until the end of time a wheat kernel that will be repro-duced. Not even God Himself could make a kernel of wheat over into a kernel of corn simply by the ordinary curred Saturday evening about 7 o'clock and was the result of an altercation between the two Italians over labor questions, during which, it is alleged, Roila called Botta a scab. Botta was stabled three times in the side, but fortunately none of the wounds is considered dangerous.

According to the facts in the case as gathered by Constable Thomas For body knew when they heard Him ask it that for the sake of emphasis he had asked what could be answered in only one way. Certainly men gather figs from figs and thistles from thistles. It is the simple statement of a universal law.

If this was and is an inflexible law in the physical realm, it is equally true that whatsoever a man sows in the moral and spiritual life will produce a harvest in kind-the exact kind that he

place. The apprehension of the man Rolla, who was himself a while since an employe at the Robinson mill, is expected soon, as the authorities are already on his trank.

Coming back now to the question of the evening, let me ask again, in the light of that which we have just been talking about: "Must a young man sow wild oats?" Well, if he must, he must expect to reap wild oats. Wild oats will not produce anything else than will not produce anything else than wild oats. They certainly will not be wild oats tame oats. It resolves itself, then, to a ques-It resolves itself, then, to a ques-tion as to whether he is willing to meet the consequences of his sowing. And that is precisely where the trouble comes. There are so many people who do not worry at all about consequences; who pay no heed to consequences; who laugh at the very idea of consequences, and who say:

"Do not talk to us about consequences; time enough when we get to them." There is a very widespread impression that somehow a person will be able to get by when the consequence be able to get by when the consequence time arrives. They know that other people frequently are called upon to suffer, but as for them, they will es-cape. But the apostle is inexorable in the principle "Whatsoever a man sows;" that is infallable; and he might just as well have said whoseever does the sowing. The law as to the person is just as absolute as the law as to the thing.

But the question of meeting the consequence is not the only question. There is also the question of putting marks on the soul. narks on the soul. When a man starts out in the wild

When a man starts out in the wild oats business he puts himself in line with the forces that work for the undoing of his soul. It is a well known fact that if the cultivated species of things are left to themselves they will revert to the wild species. The beautiful American Beauty if neglected would come to a mere wild rose of the ordinary sort. When a man begins to sow wild oats he automatically stops cultivating the better, the best things. Luther Burbank took a spineless cactus of Central America and grafted it into a spine cactus that grows in Luther Burbank took a spineless cactus of Central America and grafted it into a spine cactus that grows in New Mexico and produced a cactus that is not only spineless but useful for food. In that case the good was strong emough to supplant the bad and to assume control. When a young man sows wild oats he commits himself to the program of the worst that is in him and it will not be long unless he changes his program before the evil will have the ascendency.

Someone has said: "Hell is simply sin gone to seed." And it is equally true that heaven is righteousness brought to its culmination. It is simply a question as to which direction one wishes to travel.

I presume there are places in the Nagara river above the falis where boating would be comparatively safe if a person did not go too far. But

There was a man who told me that years ago he had foolishly allowed himself to be one of a party to see Paris—to see the underworld of Paris. And he saw it. But he said he would for the ensuing year: Walter F. Lester, Daniel T. Shea, Shepard B. Palmer. Edwin W. Higgins, and George S. Watts. At the subsequent meeting the directors elected the following officers: President, Walter F. Lester; vice president, Daniel T. Shea; treasurer, Shepard B. Palmer; secretary, John J. Corkery. Secretary John J. Corkery. Secretary John J. Corkery fead his annual report which was accepted and so was the report of the treasurer, Shepard B. Palmer, which follows: himself to be one of a party to see Paris—to see the underworld of Paris. And he saw it. But he said he would give almost anything he possessed if he could obliterate that night from his memory. He committed no overt sin that night, but he dragged his soul through the mire and allowed his soul to see things that will stain his memory to the end of life. It wasn't fair. Had he known, he would not have done it. He thought he was entitled to know what was going on in order that he might raise his voice against lt. But he learned only one thing that night, and that was that one cannot a spectacle and allow it to look with its calm pure eyes on the terrible debauchery of sin. The guilty memory of it will haunt him to his dying day.

The whole thing is summed up in an ingenious and impressive illustration that I once heard D. L. Moody give. He had a heart to heart talk with his hired man out on the farm. The result of that conference was the very penitent confession of the hired man that in a moment of anger he had scattered thistle seed all over the field where the wheat by and by would come to its maturity. "Will you, can you forgive me, Mr. Moody?" "Oh, yes: I can and will; and since you are so penitent I will assure you here and now that you need not worry further about those thistles. I freely forgive, and our friendship will continue just the same. But, John, when the reaping time comes and you shall put in your sickle to gather the wheat you must also gather the thistles that were scattered by your own/hand."

That 's the whole principle in a nutshell. The young man that assumes that he must sow his wild oats does not always stop to consider that there is a reaping time for wild oats as well as for the real grain of good character.

I can see him now, a man whom I knew. He was at manhood's prime Statement Year Ending Oct. 31, 1916.

who sow the wild oats. There are a lot of other people who also think he must.

Before attempting to answer this question, let us look for a moment at the statement made by Paul in his letter to the Galatians—the statement I have chosen for our text: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap."

There is laid down in that sentence a law of life so inflexible and so universal that even God Himself could not change it without changing the is reaping prick his very soul. He is reaping, reaping. And by and by the grim reaper Death will gather him in and the transaction will be closed and he will be called upon to give an account of the deeds done in the body. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Thanks be unto God, it is possible to sow good seed and reap a good harvest unto eternal life.

that is always the danger. There is a temptation to indulge in things that seem not so very bad and that do not appear to lead to consequences that are especially frightful. But meanwhile the stream is coursing on down towards destruction. How much better it would be to avoid the evil; to omit the wild oat sowing period: to learn that it is a miserable fallacy that it is necessary to know sin in order to appreciate goodness. Paul said: "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." How much better that than to bear on the soul the marks of sin—sears that will never heal.
